lectures — an informative talk without demeaning the "labyrinthine dispute" over freedom of choice and determinism or other such exercises in philosophic discussion, the exploration of ideas on the university premise should not be questioned. for it is precisely the function of the university to probe the 'enduring truths' to continually liberate man.

as executive director of the marathon house, inc., a rehabilitation center dealing with drug addicts, james germano has done considerable consultant and advisory work in the field of drug rehabilitation in new york, rhode island and pennsylvania. an ex-addict, germano explicated the problems of drug rehabilitation, drug use, and drug abuse.

the author and the protagonist of the professional radical, saul alinsky, spoke to an optimistic yet realistic approach to change. he has gone into inner city areas and organized residents into power blocs, capable of challenging and winning from the local power structure equality in jobs, housing, and education.

being recognized now more as a 'pusher of causes' than an actress, jane fonda, less radically obtuse than the news media would record, supported in her lecture alternatives to the suppression of the black panther party, the unfair treatment of indians, and the vietnam war. she has co-founded the g i office in washington to hear complaints of illegal military discipline of soldiers.

one of the last muckrakers. jack anderson, syndicated columnist, makes a habit of exposing public servants who are living off, rather than for their jobs — his insight lecture was aimed at just that. anderson's dry, factual approach was realistically disturbing, revealing such scandals that surrounded the tax program.

bernadette devlin, youngest member of parliament, was still 21 when her fighting maiden speech to the house of commons rocketed her to fame. after serving a prison sentence for helping to organize resistance to police in the londonderry riots, miss devlin resumed her explosive role. to the mercer audience she abhorred injustices not only in her homeland but also in america — espousing a 'personal' socialism.

an avowed foe of compulsory integration, james j kilpatrick, through unpredictable and rapier sharp wit, reaffirmed his conservative sense of humor. his lecture was strictly conservative. he has been a columnist since 1941 and presently has a column in 145 leading newspapers. kilpatrick's views receive the attention of both militants and moderates.

one of the founders of the committee on appeal for human rights (coahr) and the student non-violent coordinating committee (sncc), julian bond is currently a member of the georgia house of representatives. as an early blossoming politician whose polished approach is not unheeded, bond spoke to the black, the white, and the future in politics.

frederick wiseman, producer of documentaries exposing conditions as they are, received his first acclaim from "titticut follies," a film revealing the deplorable conditions in mental institutions of reform. shown on campus in connection with this lecture were three of his films — law and order, hospital, and high school. his subjective approach is finalized by the objective product — his film — his view — his subject.

efforts to gain insight into ideas, problems, and situations has become, unfortunately, termed academic anarchism. in the words of saul alinsky, if you do not deal with the reality, the reality will deal with you. the danger is to presuppose that you know and are dealing with the realities of any given situation without delving into its innermost onclaves and to subject yourself to the worst status imaginable — self delusion. the irony of the lecture series was the public reaction. university communities traditionally have been looked upon as sacred citadels where truths are enshrined in snobbish arrogance. paradoxically, the resounding cry coming from without is the charge of promoting revolution or radicalism by allowing truths to be tested in the arena of open discussion and debate. academic arrogance has shifted to academic interaction in the great awakening disclosing the hallowness of self-righteousness.

the conflict between the autonomous life and outside authority is not new. its manifestation is merely more acute. it grows out of an increasingly subjective concept of the meaning of freedom. along this personalism, as i label it, there is in those young people extensive and admirable social idealism, an active concern for racial justice and even for social harmony. they possess great sensitivity to the needs of others and much determination to conduct their lives so as to contribute personally to their ideal of a decent society . . . for all their altruism, most of them lack a balanced sense of what their ideals imply in terms of social and public action. here it seems is the peculiar and special role for contemporary education and the modern scholar: college youth must be led to that balanced sense. somehow, since we seemingly have lost the proper passageway for human action which lies between the cherished autonomous life and the place of social authority, we may through study, thought, wisdom and love effectively help those who wish to re-establish it.

a few years ago, the former pastor of a macon church and his wife returned to visit and as we talked he commented that they were surprised that i had chosen to remain at mercer so long. thinking back over the opportunities elsewhere and events at mercer, i think the answer as to why, would be the students and personal friends among the alumni and faculty. the past two decades has seen higher education in a state of transition, mercer's student body has changed from a typically georgian one to the more cosmopolitan one of today; mercer is emerging from the status of a regional institution to become one of a wider sphere of influence. the college curricula have passed through many changes marked by a shift in greater responsibility to the student, as some may indicate from the relevant to the irrelevant, but the conscientious student may still attain a background which will enable him to live with others and continue his educational processes throughout his lifetime. as always, the student body is basically honest and open. today's students live in a different world than their parents and older brothers and sisters, they have little conception of the depression years, world war ii, korea, and their effects upon individuals as well as educational institutions, and they have little curiosity about them. they too are idealists, but show less friendly competition than their elders, yet if you listen, you may learn from them, perhaps not scientific concepts or of events of history, but of an idea of the needs of the community and of individual involvement, in one word — relevance. good or bad, depending upon the viewpoint of the observer, the "traditional" leisurely paced activities of the campus life are being modified or supplanted to fit the more rapidly paced needs of the student and a professed greater concern for the individual development and expression.

i have from the outset interpreted my position as a student personnel worker in terms of its counseling and guidance potential. i find today's student to be much more receptive to advice and critical comment and also willing to express real feelings and problems when approached by a "friend" who is interested and wants to help as opposed to an "authority figure" who sits in judgment and is viewed first and foremost as a disciplinarian. my responsibility is to help the individual student look at a problem situation objectively in light of all possible alternatives and consequences. as directions and objectives are established, my function is to help him meet and deal with anxiety, accept those barriers which are insurmountable, and change those things which he decides should be changed. even though his decisions may be contrary to my own value system, if they are congruent with his conscience and within the boundaries of society, i feel that i must appreciate his right to the choices. my goal as a student personal counselor is to strive for person-to-person relationships with students — relationships that are honest, open, and genuine — relationships that are based on true and accurate communication.

what do you think you are doing here, cass? hunh? (he is often preoccupied and, unfortunately, does not hear well.) what do you think you are doing here, my man? oh. i think i am investigating the nature of being and am trying to show other people (who are called "students," but i too am a "student") that this is an important investigation. i am trying to involve these people in my investigation and in their own investigations, and much of the time we are failing to do this. but there are also those times which compensate for the failures, which even erase the failures from memory — those times when they and i make breakthroughs to new understandings. the tools which we use are our brains, our instincts, novels, poems, plays, stories, essays, philosophical speculations, the lessons of history, and our developed or developing beliefs about god and man. the reason we are trying to do this thing is as i said, because it is important. it is important because without it we are less than what we are called to be.

at mercer a student can behave more like an artist — in other schools he acts like a student because the departments are too structured and the emphasis is on the graduate department. here students graduate with a feeling they can do something half way original. it takes time for people to get unhinged from their preconceived ideas of what should be derived from commercialism. i wish our department could offer more courses, because art is a slow process. students need to be around their professors and involved in their department not only in art but in all major fields of study. you grow academically from the learning experiences of each other. i'm pleased that students are taking art courses as electives, simply to experience the uniqueness of being unhinged. art is an entity within all things. being an artist has not alienated me from other professions. i'm not denying art when i play golf — i do everything!

why did we choose
pharmacy for a career?
by david r uran

in the beginning of recorded history, pharmacy was a mystical profession practiced usually by priests and medicine men. later on it became under the control of physicians and doctors.

during the seventeenth century, pharmacy, the science of compounding, dispensing and protecting medicines, was separated from the practice of medicine, which is the science of treating disease and the preservation of health.

in this state, to become a registered pharmacist requires five years of study after high school graduation, plus an internship and passing a state pharmacy examination.

the first two years include a pre-professional education equivalent to a junior college. among the subjects taught then are english, biology, mathematics, economics and other liberal arts.

the last three years concentrate on the studies more directly related to the practice of pharmacy. they include chemistry, physiology, physics, anatomy, latin, public health, clinical microscopy, bacteriology, pharmacology, botany, etc.

pharmacists learn about all medicines and drugs. they study their clinical benefits and incompatibilities, their preparation, dosage, appearance, testing and storage. with a little more study, we are able to become a research scientist.

most pharmacists have one particular and important characteristic. we like people. as a member of "the health team," pharmacists with physicians, nurses, etc., share greatly in helping people to get well and live longer and healthier lives.

and, at the end of each day, we have this soul satisfying thought. the medicines we supply have not only helped people to get well, but have often actually saved lives.

rho chi society

the gamma alpha chapter of rho chi was established at mercer university in 1967. charters for chapters of this organization are granted only to groups in schools or colleges which are members in good standing of the american association of colleges of pharmacy. eligibility for membership in the society is based on high attainment in scholarship, character, personality, and leadership. to be selected for membership in the chapter is the highest honor that a student can earn at mercer university southern school of pharmacy.

the inter fraternity council, consisting of three members — the president and two representatives from each of the professional pharmaceutical fraternities on the campus — is the student regulatory body for all member fraternities at the school. its purpose is to provide for the general welfare, promote scholastic, professional, social, and recreational activities and insure the cooperation of its member fraternities. also the ifc acts to interpret the fraternity system of this school to the administration and faculty and to the community in order that the fraternities function in an atmosphere of healthy approval from the school authorities and the general public.

a year goes by in which we just don't have time . . . a year of getting yourself together . . .
coming together? i'm optimistic by nature . . . it's a good thing.
